

Dr. Richelle DaSouza is an Associate Professor in the Business Information Systems and Analytics Department of the Willie A. Deese College of Business and Economics at North Carolina A&T State University. Her research interests are examining the role of information systems (IS) in organizational practices and the impact of emerging technologies on individual behaviors. She has published in top ranked IS journals and has presented at numerous regional, national, and international IS conferences. Most recently, Richelle served as a Special Issue Guest Editor for the Journal of the Southern Association of Information Systems (JSAIS) and published a book chapter in Thriving as a Woman in Leadership in Higher Education: Stories and Strategies from Your Peers.